Seems on Track; Focus Remains on CereKin Phase-3 Results in August

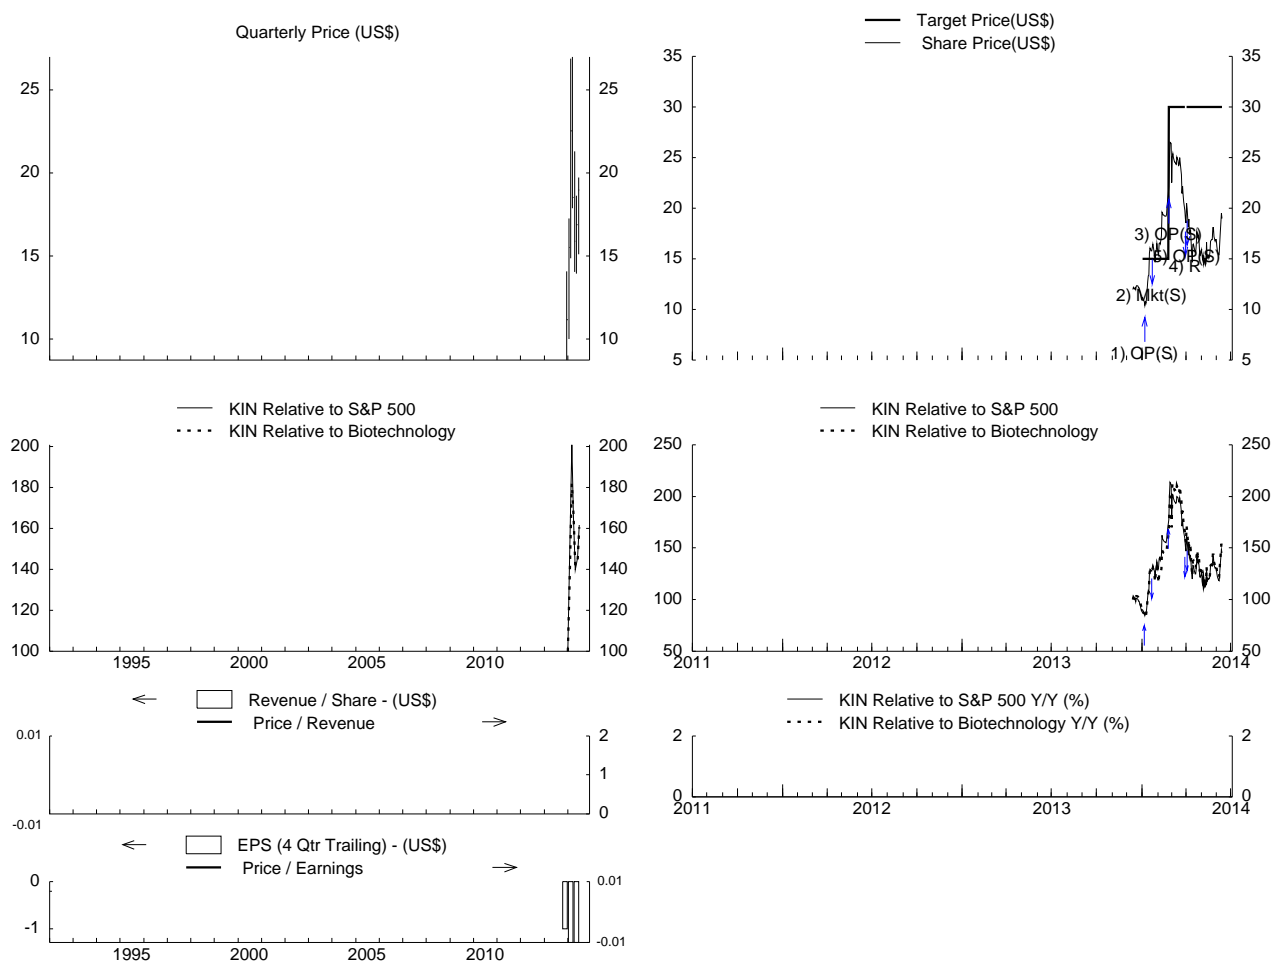

This morning, Kindred hosted an investor event during which the company provided an overview of the FDA approval process in companion Animal Health and their pipeline.

Our View:

- Incrementally positive. Given that most investors are still new to the animal health market, we believe that the overview provided by Dr. Stephen Sundlof about the FDA review process was informative, and it should increase investor confidence in Kindred. Dr. Sundlof was the Director of the Center for Veterinary Medicine (CVM) at the FDA from 1994-2008, where he oversaw all veterinary products regulated by the FDA. Based on this experience, as well as our prior discussions with Dr. Sundlof, we believe he is an integral member of the Kindred management team.
- Investors' focus remains on the upcoming CereKin Pivotal trial in dogs with osteoarthritis (OA), which has completed enrollment. The company narrowed its expected timeline for reporting results to mid-August. The study is about 90% powered to meet the primary efficacy endpoint vs. placebo (please click here to see our detailed discussion of this trial). We had assigned a 70% probability of success for the CereKin phase-3 trial, and forecast peak sales of ~$95 million by 2019. We note that during its 1Q14 earnings call, Kindred management also assigned a 70% probability of success for this trial, and other leading pivotal programs. We believe that the CereKin OA study is probably the riskiest of the three Kindred pivotal studies expected to read out this year, and as such, the results would likely have a disproportionate impact. The AtoKin and SentiKin pivotal trials are also ongoing and are also expected to readout by the end of the year to support NADA filings in 2014. We are particularly excited about AtoKin for Atopic Dermatitis \(AD\) based on the strong launch of Apoquel from Zoetis \(ZTS, \$31.99, Outperform\). Finally, Kindred continues to expect 2014 OPEX to be $25-$35MM.
- We maintain our Outperform (Speculative) rating on KIN.
